

Emerson Motors Case Up at the Pelletier Trial

ATTY CARROLL FIRST WITNESS

Testifies as to Dealings With Robert P. Matches

Says He Met Matches
John G. Carroll took up the case for the Emerson Motor Co. today at the Pelletier trial in court.

Carroll testified that he had been in business in Boston for years, and that he had met Robert P. Matches in 1919.

Carroll said that Matches had an office in the Emerson Motor Co. building in Boston, and that he had met Matches there.

Carroll said that Matches had been in Boston for some time, and that he had met Matches there.

Carroll said that Matches had been in Boston for some time, and that he had met Matches there.

Carroll said that Matches had been in Boston for some time, and that he had met Matches there.

Carroll said that Matches had been in Boston for some time, and that he had met Matches there.

DEADLOCK CONTINUES IN THE DAIL EIREANN

Heated Session of Dail Described by Merrill

By CHARLES A. MERRILL GLOBE STAFF MAN

Special cable to the Globe.
DUBLIN, Jan. 5.—When another day dawned on the battle of words in the Dail last night, but one fact stood out beyond dispute—the political leaders of the Irish people are divided.

Unless an unpropitious reconciliation takes place, President De Valera and his group on one side and Minister for Foreign Affairs Arthur Griffith, who as head of the opposition brought back the treaty from London, and his followers are at the parting of the road.

Few of those who witnessed the fierce passage of words between De Valera, who still except the treaty, as it stands, and Griffith, who is fighting for ratification, in the closing hours of the Dail Eireann debate last evening, believe that, whether the treaty is accepted or rejected, the membership of the Dail will continue to be a united body.

Last night 23 deputes had spoken for the treaty and 13 against it. At times during the day the debate was extremely sharp, sometimes even bitter, and freighted with personalities.

The debate in the Dail, would seem as a feat if it were not for its tragic significance. Indescribable clinging seems so natural to the lips of the Irish, or older to the cheeks of its orators. There is hardly a human movement in the country from labor to archaological research, that is not divided and subdivided into the following: Its politics there always have been party differences.

Minority Party Assured
It required a blood-and-tear policy on Britain's part to weld the Irish people together in their fight for a larger freedom. Now that policy has been modified. Irishmen who were the ranks of the Irish leaders. If the treaty is ratified the opponents will form a minority party. They have said so much in the Dail.

Continued on the Tenthenth Page.

MRS STILLMAN, AT THREE RIVERS, QUE, AWAITS WITNESSES FOR HRR

From "U. S. A. Post."
Boarding Train for the White of Canada

THREE RIVERS, Que., Jan. 5.—Mrs. James A. Stillman, diplomat and Phil. Bessville, correspondent in the district, and her party, arrived here last night from New York.

They were here to await the arrival of Mrs. James A. Stillman, who is expected to arrive in the afternoon.

The party consists of Mrs. Stillman, her husband, and their children.

Mrs. Stillman is expected to arrive in the afternoon.

1922 5 Jan Boston Globe from page

Clipped By:

ashutes344326
Mon, Nov 30, 2020